Obiettivi di apprendimento

Conoscenze

By the end of the semester, students are expected to be able to:

- - understand theoretical ideas of the key theorists of modern and contemporary sociology like Georg Simmel and Karl Marx
- - make connections between contemporary theories and classical theories
- - have a sense of the historical and intellectual circumstances in which each of these thinkers emerged
- - compare similarities and differences between the perspectives of different thinkers
- - identify relative strengths and weaknesses of given theories
- - discuss contemporary social phenomena in light of the theories learned in course
- Read and understand original texts of the chosen authors.

Modalità di verifica delle conoscenze

The knowledge will be tested through a continuous debate in classroom and the final oral proof. If the course numbers will allow, students will have the possibility to write and discuss a term paper.

Capacità

Students will be able to read and understand complex theoretical texts, to do bibliographical research, to write and present a term paper.

Modalità di verifica delle capacità

The skills will be tested through the texts comment in classroom, collective discussion and the final oral proof. If the course numbers will allow, students will have the possibility to write and present in class a term paper.

Indicazioni metodologiche

METHODS OF INSTRUCTION:

- Lectures
- Class and small discussion
- Independent student writing and reflection
- Videos and films
- In-class activities
- Any other instructions as appropriate for learning needs

Programma (contenuti dell'insegnamento)

Syllabus of the course: Sociological Theory. Money, capital and modernity in Karl Marx and Georg Simmel

The year 2018 marks the 200th anniversary of Karl Marx's birth and the 100th anniversary of Georg Simmel's death. This course wants to take the occasion to reflect on the relation between their works and diagnosis of modern society and culture.

The relevance of Marx's writings to Simmel's oeuvre is out of question: in the premise of his major work, Philosophy of Money(1900), Simmel declares his intention "to construct a new storey beneath historical materialism" (from the Preface). The continuities between Simmel's work and Karl Marx's Capital are most striking at the level of the diagnosis of modern society: the analysis of alienation, commodity fetishism, and capital's quantifying and accelerating tendencies are not only critically discussed but also expanded in Simmel's investigations of the paradoxes of modern culture, to the point that David Frisby once said, The Philosophy of Money is a Capital written in dialogue with Kant's Transcendental Aesthetic instead of Hegel's Logic. These analysis, however, have very different philosophical and political foundations: whereas Marx relied on the tradition of Left Hegelianism, English political economy, and French socialism, Simmel dialogued mainly with neo-Kantianism, neoclassical economics, and vitalism. To what extent, then, do Simmel's investigations on money supplement, widen or contradict Marx's analysis of capital? Do their different philosophical and methodological starting points prevent a productive dialogue between their arguments? How to reconcile Marxian analyses of class and exploitation with Simmel's focus on pathologies affecting the totality of modern individuals? In what way can the confrontation between their perspectives become relevant for current sociology and social philosophy? This course will try to reflect on these aspects of the relation between Marx and Simmel.
